Self-narrative:

My interest in art began at a very young age, as I enjoyed expressing my thoughts and emotions using paint and paper. However, it wasn't until I was introduced to ceramic art that my passion truly ignited. I was drawn to the malleability and diversity of ceramics, prompting me to explore the possibilities of this medium.

My interest in the theme of clouds stems from my love for nature and contemplation of life's transience. Clouds, as unpredictable elements in the natural world, sparked deep reflections on life, time, and existence. I began creating works centered around clouds, exploring their symbolic significance and aesthetic value.

Importance of art:

Art is crucial to me because it serves as a means of expressing my inner world and communicating with the world around me. Through art, I can explore my emotions, ideas, and thoughts, sharing my feelings and experiences with the audience.

Questions raised by my work:

My work raises questions about life, time, and existence. By exploring the ephemeral yet beautiful nature of clouds, I provoke contemplation on the transient and eternal aspects of life. Through my art, I aim to inspire deep reflections on nature, life, and existence, as well as an understanding of the subtle connections between humanity and nature.
